Blunt Criticism

Karl Heinz Gemmer, a department bead at the West German Federal Criminal Bureau, told a police union meeting last month that international police cooperation "with its means and methods was far from being at operative parity" with the international octwork of terrorism. The bead of the bureau, Horst Herold, was equally blunt. "There are piles of the bard-est kind of coordinating problems present when it comes to dealing with foreign police departments.

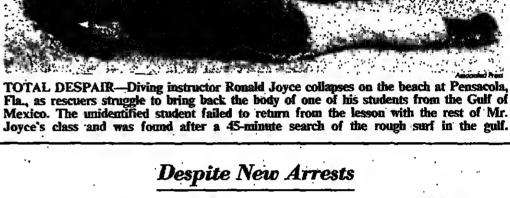

No West German police officer has publicly acknowledged it, but there was great irritation in Bonn during the kidnapping of Hanns-Martin Schleyer last fall because it was felt that France only went through the motions of hunting for the German businessman in Alsace, where the Germans thought he was held and where his body eventually was found. Heinz Schwarz, a member of parliament's lower house who has served as interior minister in the state of Rhiocland-Palatinate, bordering on France, explained: "Al the moment the cooperation is mostly on paper and far too re-stricted to be of much actual use in the event something happens. There is no notion of hot pursuit. If the German police ever ran someone over a border and then shot an innocent bystander, there would be an international hue and cry that no one would ever forget. So while you wait, the suspect vanishes."

In Mr. Herold's view, the best step would be the development of an international data bank to facilitate contacts between police departments. Interpol, the Parisbased international messageswitching center, is ineffective be-cause its charter forbids it to provide informatioo on political

BELGRADE, May 8 (WP)-In a significant relaxation on travel restrictions by a Communist country. Hungary has agreed to abolish visas with neighboring Austria. The agreement, which is to go into force in January, will complete the transformation of what was once one of Europe's most heavily guarded frontiers into the most open and relaxed of East-West crossing points. Austrians and Hungarians will be able to cross from one country to another merely by showing their passports, al-though most other nationals will still need visas.

Less than 20 years ago, the Hun-garian side of the frontier was protected by barbed-wire fences, ploughed land, and minefields. Border guards frequently shot people trying to flee illegally to the West via neutral Austria.

The abolition of visas is expected to encourage as many as 1.5 million Austrians to visit Hungary next year for day trips or weekend excursions. At present, visas can be ducting an energetic campaign to obtained at the frontier, but the sometimes lengthy formalities deter many would-be tourists.

It could also severely test Hungary's already strained facilities for receiving tourists - one reason given by Hungarian officials. (Continued on Page 2, Col. 4)

Ex-Agent Accuses CIA on Angola Role

By Seymour M. Hersh NEW YORK. May 8 (NYT)-A former intelligence agent, in a secretly published book, has accused high-level officials of the Central Intelligence Agency of misleading Congress and the public about the scope of U.S. involvement in the 1975 Angolan civil war. John Stockwell, former chief of the CtA's Angolan task force, writes in his book, "In Search of Enemies." that the agency, initially without the knowledge of the White House, Congress or the State Liberation of Angola, headed by Department, used Americans as Agostinho Neto, a Marxist intellecmilitary advisers in Angola.

Mr. Stockwell, who resigned in disillusionment from the CIA io also says in the book that the CtA was secretly underwriting various efforts around the world to recruit mercenaries to fight on behalf of two U.S.-supported factions in Angola— a charge that the CtA had previously denied.

Mr. Suarez beads a minority government that is facing a grave eco-nomic crisis and, at the same time, is guiding a new constitution through parliament. The NATO question could well turn on the government's ability to retrieve a political momentum that many feel it does not now have.

The Socialist Workers party, the second largest group in parliament, and the Communists oppose joining the alliance, asserting that spain should adopt a neutral policy and avoid entanglements in big-power rivalries. The experience that we have witnessed in the last 30 years is that countries that have the least connections to blocs have the greatest margin of maneuver," said Luis Yanez, the Socialists for-eign affairs expert. "But this doesn't mean that we are anti-Atlanticist."

Curiously, the leftists who op-pose membership in NATO have tactical allies among elderly farright officers in the military estab-lishment, particularly in the 220,000-man army. The army is the least prepared of the three services to enter the alliance and would most likely be reduced in size to in-

Operated by the French companies Elf Aquitaine and Total Oil Marine Ltd. a subsidiary of the Compagnie Française des Petroles, the field contains 200 billion cubic meters of gas and is expected to provide Great Britain with 30 per cent of its natural gas needs and up to 10 per cent of its total energy.

Because of the problems posed hy a deep trench between the field and the Norwegian coast, all of the gas will be piped to Britain.

The French see Frigg, with its six platforms 223 miles off the Scottish coast, as an addition to Europe's effort to free itself from a dependen-ey on Middle East oil. While this may be wishful thinking, both the British and the Norwegians look on the Frigg field as an important new

The oil spread despite efforts by a florilla of tugs to arrive in time to wash it away with detergent.

"It's a major disaster," said a fisherman as the oil rolled up the beach, one of the finest on England's east coast, just before the start of the vacation season.

Experts had been hoping to contain the slick and earlier today were confident that the beaches could be saved. But an overnight change in wind direction washed the oil onto the beaches before the tugs could get near enough to spray it.

After Three-Year Struggle

Hopes for Releasing Kin in Vietnam Fade in U.S.

By Christopher Dickey WASHINGTON (WP)-The virtually unprecedented release of Ronald Humphrey's family from Ho Chi Minh City once offered hope to hundreds of U.S. citizens who still have close relatives trapped in Vietnam.

Last year State Department offi-cials would tell grieving families that although the department had not secured the release of their stranded relatives, Mr. Humphrey - virtually alone among Ameri-cans - had been able to get his common-law wife and her four chil-dren out of Vietnam.

On Jan. 31, however, Mr. Humphrey and Vietnamese expatriate David Truong were arrested on charges of spying for Hanoi. Diplomatic relations, which were never good between the United States and Vietnam, have grown worse be-cause of the case, U.S. officials say.

For at least 240 U.S. families, the State Department now has little hope to offer, and after three years of fruitless struggling to be reunited with the people they love, many of the U.S. relatives share mixed feel-ings of determination and despair.

Texas Governor Is Defeated in Primary Race

DALLAS, May 8 (AP)-State Attorney General John Hill narrowly avoided a runoff and was assured today of winning the Democratic gubernatorial nomination over twoterm incumbent Dolph Briscoe.

Although all the votes had not been counted, officials at the Texas Election Bureau said today that there was no question that Mr. Hill had won the Democratic nomination by capturing 51.26 per cent of the vote in the five-man primary race on Saturday. Mr. Briscoe got 41.66 per cent.

Former Gov. Preston Smith, whom many bad expected to win enough votes to force Mr. Hill and Mr. Briscoe into a runoff, finished third with 5.22 per cent.

In the Republican primary, Bill Clements, a Dallas businessmen and deputy defense secretary under Presidents Richard Nixon and Gerald Ford, defeated attorney Ray Hutchison of Dallas, a former state Republican chairman.

U.S. Rep. Bob Krueger won the Democratic nomination for the U.S. Senate. He will oppose Republican Sen. John Tower in November. Sen. Tower was unopposed in the Republican primary.

Uganda Reports Several Arrests In Amin Purge

NAIROBL May 8 (UPI)-The Uganda radio today announced the arrests of several high-ranking officers in a continuing purge by Presi-dent Idi Amin of the highest echelons of his military regime.

The radio said that among those detained was Ali Toweli, a former close associate of Marshal Amin, who earlier had been dismissed as director of training and operations in the police,

The radio, which first broadcast word of the arrests yesterday, also named Col. Khamis Tafi and Lt. Col. Dalaw as among those arrested, but gave no further details of their positions or branches of the armed services.

Marshal Amin said that all those rounded up would be detained until investigations into their activities had been completed. According to the radio, monitored in Nairobi. Marshal Amin stressed that "no one is above the law" and if anyone — even a minister — broke the law. he would be dealt with accordingly.

Vietnam Cadres Are Reported to Seize Property

To the nutrition experts at Weight Watchers International, losing weight by avoiding these foods is no longer the rigid regimen it once was. Now more of the decisions on what to eat are in the hands of the fat people themselves.

Through such innovations, Weight Watchers today is almost a religion to more than half a million people who attend weekly classes in "how to lose weight and keep it off." They are in all 50 states and

F. E. Agnew, senior vice president of the food company, put it simply. "It gives us two worldwide brand names, both internationally known, although Weight Watchers is only 15 years old."

Agnew said that Heinz considered weight control and diet concern as "a market very corollary to our food business" and one that was getting greater attention around the world.

cod was responsible for the settle-ment of Iceland. It was in the 9th willy in preparation for the century that it was first inhabited, originally by the Irish, who did not hes at it as, for example, salmon stay, and then by the Norsemen, it usually dving after spawning, who did. Both may have been attracted by the richness of its coo fisheries; in any case it was cod which made possible the extension of Norse power around the world.

The Norsemen, Vikings or Normans, as they were called in different times and places, began by columning the Sbettand Islands about 700, also perhaps because of ced.

The Normans were aided in these conquests by pussession of a these conquests by possession of a food which would keep during long sea voyages, dried codfish. An almost perfectly preserved Viking ship found near Oslo included among its furnishings a fish cutting board still scarred with the marks of the knives which, a thousand years before, had hacked through the tough dried codfish. Cod was also an article of commerce for the Normans, who made it a Mediterranean specialty when they reached that part of the world. It is still today, in Europe, a fish caught in the north and eaten in the south, salted or dried, on the shores of a sea which offers fresh fish all year

The ancient Gauls became cod fishermen too, sailing to the North Sea to take cod, which they sold to customers farther south. The Romans were not cod fanciers and the rich Gallo-Romans were snobbish about it too, but it was popular with the poor, as an inexpensive food. For centuries, with only an

Brezhnev in Bonn

Because of Leonid Brezhnev's ill health. one U.S. television commentator remarked that the most significant aspect of his trio to West Germany was that he made it at all. And to no small extent, the same applies to the political context of the visit.

Little that was concrete emerged - an economic agreement that covers a considerable length of time but is hardly very specific. What was important was that the leader of the Soviet Uniou could come to West Germany, he accorded an impressive reception. and talk at length and apparently quite frankly with the Federal Republic's chancel-

There was a time, as Chancellor Schmidt pointed out, when this would have been impossible. Germany, after all, is the place where East and West meet where their goals are most appearent and where the Berlin Wall stands as the most obvious monument to a victorious ciliance that broke into hostile parts when the victory was won. Morcover. Germany was riself not only a target of that alliance, but the spails of victory. Not, perhaps, in the usual sense of offering territory to the victors (sithough the Saviet Union did snatch some, as did Polittid) but more importandy in providing ground whereen the victors could provide substitutes for crushed

Nazism. The West inspired a democratic republic, the East a Communist one, and the two face each other as advanced guards of NATO and the Warsaw Pact.

So Germany remains the most sensitive area of Europe in what was once a global dichotomy and still presents a major confrontation of superpowers and their chief allies. When one remembers the tensions over the Berlin blockade, the creation of governments in East and West Germany and the restoration of their armed forces, it is not surprising that the sight of Mr. Brezhnev in Bonn is in itself, a phenomenon of no small-importance. It could not have occurred while Stalin lived, or Konrad Adenauer.

Yet it is too bad that the Brezhnev visit amounted to symbolism rather than actual progress toward restoring the dilapidated detente which has NATO in a state of concern. It dramatizes the fact that the gains of recent years were great but it is also a reminder that the losses of recent months have created

The rhetoric of the Soviet Union is a good deal less swaggering than it once was, but Soviet adventures in Africa and advances in armaments, are more ominous than rhetoric. One can sincerely wish good health to Mr. Brezhnev while at the same time urging a healthier policy on his government.

The Fukuda Mission

The U.S. visit by Japan's Prime Minister Takeo Fuluda was a success, in the sense that relations between the two countries are at least not getting worse, but the central di-lemma is still undented. Jupan exports far more than it imports: the United States does the reverse.

Each country's imbalance has become a menace to the prosperity of the other. Each government has plenty of high-minded acvice for the other - to do things that would be expensive and politically unattractive. Neither is in a mood to move very culckly.

The United States thinks Japan ought to speed up its economic growth, to broaden the market for U.S. goods there. The Japanese suggest, in reply, that the United States ought to reduce its rate of inflation to keep the dollar from aropping further. People in the U.S., bristling, inquire whether Japan is not dumping steel and motorcycles and so forth — that is selling illegally at prices below those in Japan. The Japanese change the subject and observe occurately, that the whole question of trade deficits would become much more manageable if the U.S. would only cut back its inordinate imports of

In this kind of fending, it is Japan that is under greater pressure to act. The United States - and most other industrial countries - have told Japan that its trade surplus is intolerably large and that, if it persists, it will force deficit countries to resort increasingly to protectionism. The torrent of attractive and well-designed Japacese goods pouring into U.S. and European markets has become an election issue of some weight, in a time of high unemployment.

The rather cruising U.S.-Japanese negotiations at the end of last year succeeded in persuading Japan that it had to take those warnings seriously. But the warnings became louder over the winter, when, instead of dropping as forecast, the Japanese trade surplus ker t rising. At length the Japanese goverament reluctantly began to discuss export limitations. That was the atmosphere in which Mr. Fukuda undertook his visit last

The principal result of the trip is a series of pledges by Jaoan to restrain the volume of certain key goods exported to the United States. Steel shipments to the U.S. are to be held 10 per cent below last year's level, Exports of color television sets are to be 30 per cent lower. Japanese automobile sales in the S. are to be no higher than last year-although it is worth noting that last year's sales were up a startling 35 per cent over 1976.

Mr. Fukuda has set those ceilings at just about the volumes at which those exports seem likely to run in the absence of ceilings. The reming year does not seem to promise any great expansion of trade. Formal trade quotas are permicious, for they require the Japanese government and industry to collude in allocating foreign sales. That only increases the tendency toward cartelization about which U.S. companies legitimately complain. Mr. Fukuda's pledges, in contrast, are temporary and mainly constitute a guarantee that - unlike the past year - the coming year will oring no unexpected surges in Jaoanese exports to the U.S.

Free and rising world trade serves the best interests of both the United States and Japan. But there is a limit to the rate at which trade can increase without inflicting painful disruptions on nations' economies. If Japan were not to apply temporary restraints now on its exports to the United States, it would risk permanent restrictions before much longer. Given that choice, Mr. Fukuda has taken the wiser course.

Cyprus Deadlock

The Cyprus conflict, after the rustle of uncertain optimism generated by Mr. Ecevit's return to power in Turkey and his promise that the Turkish side would submit concrete proposals ascens already to have returned to hs accustomed dezélock ...

The Greek Cyriots found, indeed, that there was little or no ambiguity about the document which [UN Secretary-General Kurtl Waldheim passed on to them ... President Kyprianou addressed himself to the substance of the proposals, and pronounced them completely unacceptable even as a basis for negotiations. The Turks have reacted to this with an expression of injured innocence ... Each side accuses the other of being less interested in a solution of the conflict than in the United States Congress's response to President Carter's request for the lifting of the embargo on American arms sales to Turkey ... What is true is that the Greek Cypriots, who can never hope to be remotely a match for Turkey in terms of military strength, do see international support as the only possible compensating factor.

The American embargo has so far been the only concrete manifestation of that support, and cace it is lifted the Greek Cypricts will see their lac hope of leverage on the Turks disappear. Yet for them to refuse to resume the talks, if Dr. Waldheim invites them to do so, would almost certainly be a mistake, if only because that too would help the Turks impress Congress with the idea that they had made their move and that it was now from the Greek side that the obstacle to a solution

A better strategy for the Greek Cypriots would be in return to the table and see what Turkish promises of flexibility are worth in practice. Congress meanwhile could surely find a way to encourage the Turks without giving them everything they want, so that the incentive to show flexibility in the talks would still be there.

Now that Brezhner has come and gone, the results, if any, seem even more obscure.

To be sure, there were four days of high-level talks, some of them more monologues than dialogues. As is customary on such occasions. there were many rounds of toasting, the obligatory banquets, inces-sant handshaking, and flowery and grandiese words about peaceful co-existence and the need to end the arms spiral.

There was even the formal signing of two nondocuments that are remarkable for their noncommital But what was it all about? At best, perhaps, the fact that it happened.

Catalyst

Be that as it may, the presence of Brezhney, though that can hardly have been its intention, served somewhat as a catalyst and inadvertently revealed much about West Germany today.

If Brezhnev is no longer the jocular — one could almost have said care-free - fellow he appeared to be on his first trip to Bonn five years ago, then neither, it seems, are the West Germans. Age and illness have quite obviously caught threal of the years since the previous Brezhnev visit.

kind of threat.

Beyond that Brezhnev's presence shed unexpected light on the political polarization and radicalization that has come to West Germany recently. Far right and far left are at such extreme ends of the presence of the treatment of spectrum that their messages and methods are starting to become interchangeable.

Certainly the output in pusters and slogans on the part of both is pruligious, though there is understandable confusion about the striking similarities in their strident demands and complaints.

It takes hale imagination to pinpoint the authorship of the posters who would have suspected those

"Wanted" leaflets depicting Brezhney as an "international terrorist" accused of "number and deprivation of freedant to have emanauted from the diametrically opposite political pole — the Peking-oriented Communist party of Germany (KPD).

For those of you who may not know, there is also a Moscow-oriented German Communist party (DKP), which loyally cheered Boszhnev wherever and whenever it could get close enough to him, not to mention two other Communist political groups whitse ideological and geographical orientation (Alhama has been suggested) are a bit hard to pin down Thus there were walt slogans and stickers teading Brezhney Get Out, printed and distributed by the youth organization of the ultrarightist National Democratic party (NPD), and leaflets proclaiming Brezhnev the New Hitler, authored by groups calling themselves "Marxist-Leminist."

Brezhnev hims-if seemed bent on adding to the contemporary West German confusion by holding sep-arate private talks with Christian Democratic (CDU) leader Helmul Kohl and the chairman of Bavaria's Christian Social Union (CSU). Franz-Josef Strauss.

in doing so, he de facin elevated the CSU to what it occasionally claims, as other times claims not to be, a separate and equal party.

To complicate that scenario, the meeting with Kohl took a scant balf hour while that with Strauss. who recently labeled Brezhnev a "Red czar," tasted half again as long and ended with a beaming Brezbnev demonstratively accompanying a smiling Straus, all the way to the Bavarian's waiting

On the weekend West Germans were asking themselves rhetorically whether Brezhnev's long-awaited return visit to the first triumphant scene of his West politik had been worth the effort.

There is, unfortunately, no clear answer to that But the trip did make it clear that left and right redicals are coming full circle, that CDU and CSU, despite claims to the contrary, have not patched up their rift, and that West Germany certainly known how to contrary.

tiago Carrillo and his licetements controlled the congress at all important stages. Minority views were rarely heard at open sessions. A new central committee was elected without announcing any candidate's total votes. Some of those who opposed Carrillo at the beginthe convention were punished at its end.

Conventions

It is probably unfair to assess the Spanish Communists' democratic attitudes by their four-day April congress. The conventions of any political party — or of any large association — are rarely sterling examples of democracy. The 1964 Democratic National Convention under Lyndon Johason and the 1972 Republican National Convention under Republican National Convention under Richard National Convention under Richard National Convention under Richard National Conventions under Richard National Conventions under Richard National Conventions. tion under Richard Niron would probably have failed a suict test of democracy.

So, 10c, might the conventions of most U.S. labor unions. It is too easy for leaders to manipulate a large organization and too hard for individual members in band 10gether to dislodge the entrenched few at the top.

Moreover, the Communists probably are no less democratic than any other Spanish political party, all of which are differ newly formed or operating legally for the first time since the dictatorship of the late Francisco Franco. The parues simply have not had time to develop democratic procedures.

Yet this "unfair" test has to be applied to the Spanish Communists now, for there is no other way of measuring their democratic atti-uides, and gauging those senti-ments is too vital to leave aside.

The View From Damascus

By Anthony Lewis would have to deal noth the conse-

DAMASCHS—"We are not rejectionists." With those words a respected Syrian official began explaining that his government is committed to the idea of real peace in the Middle East.

Despite pressure from such rejec-tionist states as Iraq, he noted, President Hafez al-Assad continues to support UH Resolution 242— with its acceptance of Israel's right to exist within secure border. Syria would end the state of belligerercy with first as part of a general set-tlement. Israel for its part must withdree from occupied territory and deal with the Palestinians.

Those territory sound broadly like Anwar Sadat's Outline of a Middle East settlement. Why, then, did Syria sourn the Egyptian president's initiative last November, and why do Syrian officials remain so critical of it now?

The view here is that Sadat by going to Jerusalem gave away the Arab card that should have been played only in return for a settle-ment — recognition of Israel. And when the head of the largest Arab state promised "no more war," the Syrians argue; Israel could stop worrying. One man put it: "Sadat gave israel the feeling that she does not have so do anything."

Withdrawal

The only withdrawal that Israel has now offered, the Syrians note, is in the relatively uncontroversial Smai. One official remarked wryly that people used to talk of 242 as allowing "manor rectifications" of the 1967 borders, but now israel stones to be dilking about "minor restitution."

restitution.

The fear in Syria is that in the end Sadat will do what he has repeatedly said he will not: make a separate peace in return for Israeli withdrawal from the Sinai. Then, sale on the main Egyptian front. Is-queres of Palestinian frestration, indeed tome here say they do not understand why the Ismelis have not long and made n deal with Sadat accepting the vague formula that he and President Carter worked out at Asstan last January. That is to include in a statement of general principles for peace a premise to ist the Felestimans participale in the determination of their ewa return.

The Syrian "Sow is in sharp con-trast to U.S. policy, which sees the Sadat initiative as the possible beginning of a momentum for peace. But I think it is important for people in the U.S. to try to understand the Syrian perspective.

Moderate

The Syrian regime is generally described in the West as "radical," a source of concern because of its Soviet arms and other support. But in fact, it seems to me, Assad has played a moderate and responsible role — one helpful to stability — in a difficult situation.

In Lebanon, for example, the Syrians seem to have played a geneinely neutral role, taking sharp action regainst aggressive activity by, successively, the localem left and the Christian right. The Israelis, fearful at first of the Syrian presence, would now like to see the Syrian presence. ians move farther south in Lebanon - which they say they will not do. They have gotten no thanks, and the ourden of meintaining 25,000 troops in Lebanon is heavy, but Syrin has prevented the civil war from biowing up again in full force.

Again, on the issue of Middle East peace Syria has been more for hooming than many realize. As-sad has declined, so far, to talk about future diplomatic relations with israel. But he and his aides do talk about living ir negce together. rnel could at light on other occupied land. And Syria, in particular, they do not demand agreement to an independent state now. They talk, as does Carter, of a Palestini-an "homeland" or "entity."

Change

In fact, Syria's shift away from total hostility to Israel is a fair sym-bol of the fundamental change that has taken place in the Arab world in the last five years. That is the change toward a willingness to for-get the past and live with Israel if only it will go back to its 1967 borders and end the Arab fear of an ever-expanding state.

The Arabs think their change of view is not sufficiently understood by people in the U.S., among others. Syria's mainter of information. Ahmed Iskandar, made that point sharply.
Since 1973," he said, "all the positive phenomena for peace have come from the Arab side. But it has been misunderstood as a sign of cottapse - a sign that the Arab will accept Israel's refusal to withdraw and her refusal to recognize Pales-tinian identity. That is why Israel resists any real settlement."

Russia Disputes CIA On Energy Forecast

MOSCOW, May 8 (AP-DJ)—The Mideast and a slowdown in Rusviet Union disputes a forecast it d-1980's made by the Central Inligence Agency.

The report, which covered activiy in the Euromarket as well as ic currencies, also revealed that DPEC joined the bandwagon in noving funds out of the dollar during the fourth quarter. The BIS said that "virtually all" of the $4.5 bil-ion worth of OPEC deposits in that quarter were in currencies nthet than the dollar.

The fourth quarter, itself, was unusual in that external lending in domestic and Eurocurrencies by banks in the Group of 10 industrial countries plus Switzerland soared $65 billion to $657 billion at the end of December-by far" the largest quarterly gain ever recorded by the BIS.

However, it explained that the figure was distorted by translation of non-dollar currencies into dollars following weakness of the U.S. currency and by increased borrowing of dollars to finance purchases of strong currencies. In addition, activity was influenced by the traditional year-end borrowing to dress in halvest death and by some inup balance sheets and by some in-crease in the underlying trend in medium-term, syndicated bank

A number of independent spe-cinlists previously disputed the CIA forecast, but until now, the Soviet Union had not made any public response. The Soviet Union is known to have had some oil-production problems. Nonetheless, it has the world's highest daily output at near 11 million barrels, about two million barrels-a-day more than the United States. The Soviet Union also has a refining capacity of about 10 million barrels a day, second only to the U.S. capacity of about 16.8 million barrels a day, In 1976, the Soviet Union exported oil worth $4.5 billion, accounting for half of its foreign-currency earnings. The CIA projected that the country would be importing more than $10 billion worth of oil in 1985. Mr. Inozemisev calls the CIA estimate "incorrect" be-cause it is "based on the assumption that current trends of con-sumption will continue." He forecasts slower growth in consumption due to conservation programs and adds that the country is "going to develop, on the highest scale possible, oil and gas in Siberia."

Nonetheless, some CIA officials do not think the Russians will be able to produce the dilling emin able to produce the drilling equipment and pipelines necessary to get enough oil from Siberia. Moreover, Mr. Inozemtsev notes that the country will depend more heavily on ooal and nuclear energy. Although he adds that "all the scientific and technical problems have been solved here" for the increased generation of nuclear power, be adds that "the limitation is manufacturing capacity" for the reactors.

Gannett Co., owner of 77 daily U.S. newspapers and Combined Communications Corp., owner of the Cincinnau Enquirer and Oakland Tribune as well as radio and television stations, have agreed in principle on a $370-million merger. The agreement provides for an exchange of 1.2 Gannett common shares for each share of Combined. However, its 3-for-2 stock split scheduled for May 31 would reduce the exchange rate to 0.8 Gannett shares for each share of Combined. The Justice Department said it would study the proposal.

Seven-Up Co. directors have unanimously recom-mended that shareholders reject Philip Morris' ten-der offer to purchase the soft-drink concern's common stock at $41 a share because it is "inade-quate"—a view previously expressed by the company's three founding families. The tobacco company had conditioned its bid on receiving at least 51 percent of the company's outstanding stock and a Seven-Up official says he is "confident that 51 percent...won't be tendered at the price offered."

Toshiba Seen in Personal Computers

Japanese companies, already pushing into commercial computer markets, plan to sell personal computers, too. The first apparently will come from Tokyo Shibaura Electric (Toshiba). Personal computers-low-priced machines built around micropro cessors, the tiny electronic chips that also form the heart of calculators and digital watches—are being purchased in large numbers by individuals, small businesses and schools. Uses include keeping track of recipes and Christmas card lists, playing games, investment analysis, payroll computatation and tax calculation. Toshiba says only that it has made a personal computer on an experimental basis and that the machine could be marketed without major modification. The company displayed a $1,000 model at a recent West German trade fair and a spokesman then said the device would be marketed in Europe before next April. A U.S. competitor who claims to have seen a copy of Toshiba's business plan, says U.S. sales are to begin in August, n date Toshiba would not confirm. Toshiba's entrance into personal computers is seen as significant because the rapidly growing industry consists mostly of small U.S. manufacturers with limited financing and mar-

Piper field production, he calculates, is running at about 260,000 barrels a day and is expected to reach 300,000 barrels later this year. Profit Margins Said Narrowing in U.S.

By Youssef M. Ibrahim

NEW YORK, May 8 (NYT)-Although quarterly earnings of U.S. companies are expected to rebound over the next six months, profit margins are narrowing, according to a number of analysts.

Rising employment, particularly of white-collar workers, and higher wages combined with lower productivity, are pushing cost increase ahead of consumer price growth, the analysts say. They add that the high level of consumer indebtedness will not allow them to pass on

"During the first quarter of this year," said Lacy H. Hunt, senior vice president of the Fidelity Bank, "we have had the sharpest rise in labor costs in 27 years." He said that for the whole year the rise would average 8.6 percent compared with a 7 percent rise for consumer prices.

William Cox, deputy chief econ-omist for the Commerce Department, said that government data shows that employment continued to increase during the first quarter with hourly compensation up sharply. Also, unemployment has dropped from 6.9 percent last July to a reported 6.2 in this year's first quarter. Economists said that the labor market "looks very tight right

Economists with private banks and investment firms estimate that corporate earnings for the first quarter were down 5 percent from the previous quarter. And, they said, productivity suffered as well. Market sources said mediumterm interest rates of about 5 percent in West Germany and 4 percent in Switzerland, compared with 6.5 percent in Japan, has attracted many companies to tap foreign capital markets.

Deutsche mark issues will account for about 70 percent of the total, up from an average 10-to-20 percent in 1977 and Swiss franc issues will account for about 20 percent of the total. Officials said there probably will be some dollar

Underwriting sources said that Tokyo Sanyo Electric is planning the only corporate dollar issue for the period, although the Industrial Bank of Japan, and Bank of Tokyo also plan dollar issues.

Ciubank, focusing on the shrink-ing profit margins of U.S. compa-nies, estimated last week that manufacturers who earned 5 cents on the dollar in the first quarter of 1977 collected only 4.8 cents on the dollar in 1978's first quarter. Nevertheless, all economic observers predict a strong jump in after-tax profits for the rest of the year. "We will see a rebound of 10to-11 percent in the current quarter and an average annual increase of 9 percent in alter-tax profits for this year as a whole," said Robert Ortnet, senior economist at the Bank of New York.

Profits to Rise

John O. Wilson, director of economic research for the Bank of America, estimated that after taxprofits fot all U.S. companies through 1977 is projected to grow would jump from $102 billion in at average annual rates between 2.4 the first quarter to $111 billion in the second and the third quarters years, the department said in a reand $122 billion in the last quartet.

Some analysts caution, however, that, if the Carter administration's tax-cut proposal fails to pass this year, the profit rise for the last quarter will be slowed. Others say that the economy is proceeding nicely and that, if the inflation-adjusted rate of growth in gross na-tional product averages 4.5 percent for the year, profits will rise-tax

However, all agree that, given the rough ride the economy had in the first quarter of this year, business did much better than had been

INTERNATIONAL SALES EXECUTIVE

Geneva Region

A major Swiss manufacturer of industrial consumables, active in all world markets, offers the demanding job of Sales Executive to a highly qualified person, who can demonstrate in depth field experience particularly in one or more of the Middle-East, Gulf, North African and Mediterranean countries. Reporting directly to the Vice-President, he will have full profit responsibility in his area. His main tasks are the setting of ambitious but realistic sales objectives, the implementation of appropriate sales strategies to reach them, the continuous motivation and support of the sales force and maintaining top-level contacts with distributors and important clients. A number of field sales executives will be reporting directly to him. The person sought is a Swiss national (or holder of a valid work permit), between 35 and 40 years old who perferably has had a technical and/or commercial university education. His career to date will have enabled him to gain front-line experience in technical selling and later in managing a sales organisation. He must have substantial experience and a proven record in the area concerned. Consequently he will have superior knowledge of those markets and of the most effective sales strategies to adopt. Fluency in English and French is essential, knowledge of German would be an asset. To be successful, the future job-holder must have a strong personality combined with drive and open-mindedness. Ease in putting across his ideas convincingly, and to motivate people of diverse backgrounds complement his keen sense to spot opportunities for big business. This is a top job with definite career potential for which a highly attractive salary is offered. Please send your application quoting the reference number to the address below. Strict confidence is guaranteed. Enquiries by telephone are readily accepted.

Director Management Services

The continued growth of the UK subsidiary of a successful continental group supplying high quality con-sumer capital goods to the world's markets, creates the need for this new position to relieve the managing director of direct responsibility for the accounting, data processing, personnel and supply planoing functions. .

Suitable candidates, male or female and aged 35-45, will have a degree in business studies, economics or accountancy and/or. a recognised accountancy qualification. Industrial or commercial experience cover-ing accounting and at least close involve-ment with one of the other functions and a sound appreciation of the distribution function is required. Fluency in written and spoken French is also essential.

The group has a reputation for steady growth and for the sophistication of its management methods. The person appointed will be a key exacutive in the UK company and the prospects are good.

NEW YORK JEW

By Alfred Kuzin, Knopf. 307 pp. $10.95.

Reviewed by Christopher Lehmann-Haupt

TTS TRUE that Alfred Kazin is an intellectual—a New York Jewish intellectual as the unle of his latest autobiographical memoir nearly proclaims. It's undeniable that much of the content of "New York Jew" is filtered through the author's teeming mind. The big ideas and social upheavals are all here, as Kazin makes his way from the early 1940s—from the point where his earlier memoirs, "A Walker in the City" and "Starting Out in the his earlier memoirs, "A Walker in the City" and "Starting Out in the Thirties," left off—up to the present. How Kazin reacted to World War II is here; "I could no more share [the] detachment from the war expressed by the 'old socialists' I knew in New York...than I could believe in 'the global New Deal' at the New Republic and 'the American Century' of Fortune." He worked successively for the two magazines in the early 1940s. "I saw no alternative to defeating Hitsaw no alternative to defeating Hit-ler: I wanted to live." What he thought obout the Depression that was ended by the war "and only the war"—is bere. What be thought of being a Jew in the aftermath of the Holocaust; of McCarthyism, of lit-erary academics in the 1950s of rampant presidential power and the radical reaction to it in the 1960s. of the sexual revolution and the cel-ebration of Self-all are bere, all are reflected upon.

Moreover, what are perhaps the most stimulating passages in "New York Jew"—Kazin's portraits of the many writers and intellectuals he knew are distinctive because they are framed by ideas. He rarely allows people to emerge through nnecdote, except, for one rare example, when he describes Edmuod Wilsoo's erratic success at performing his beloved magic tricks; "At [a] birthday party one summer, be came with his equipment and disappeared into [a] leanto searching for newspapers be said he needed for his act. Time passed, no Edmund. We looked in and found him absorbedly reading one of the newspapers."

Instead, he explains people.

Thus, for Wilson, a hero of Kazin's memoir, "Life was one elaborately constructed sentence after another. and he had been sentenced to the sentence." Thus, for Hannah Arendt, the memoir's heroine, there was "the decisive break with tradition...There had been a tradition, and no one was more eager. and willing to bestow on you, in Greek, the prime Greek meanings of man, mind, the polis, the common good. But there had been a break. Definitely, there had been a break. Her presence on the West Side was like Lear's on the heath. The kingdom had been rent. Breakup was her life and every-one's life new." Thus, Lionel Trill-ing—whom Kazin credits "for dramatizing his mind on paper." but also gently chides for succumb-ing to "a form of middleclass claustrophobia." Trilling "was an expressive Hamlet of the totellect who felt that the time out of join! was up to him to set right. The great critic, as in Victorian times, might yel change the lemper of the ANSWER TO PREVIOUS PUZZLE.

times by his persuasion of the 'advanced intellects' around him.' So Kazin proceeds in actitely penetrating pen-sketches of such as Delmore Schwartz, Van Wyck Brooks. Stark Young Saul Bellow, Henry Luce, Sylvia Plath and many others.

Yes, the intellect is always at attention in these pages. But don't be fooled: Beneath the mind there is heart. It is evident in the passion of the prose when Kazin becomes ex-cited about an idea, it is apparent in painfully touching accounts of the deaths of his mother and father the deaths of his mother and father It nearly cries out at us in the recording of his conflicts with wom eo—in the fall from idealism into eros that separated him from his first wife, Natasha: in the numboess of uoknowing that kept him from the second one. Louise, and in the heattleground of his third marthe battleground of his third mar-riage, to Beth, some of the names in the book bave been changed - a mutually consuming drama that seemed to pale into "middle-class indulgence" against the lurid backdrop of the revolutionary 1960s. Most of all, the heart is manifest where Kazin resolves one of the largest intellectual dilemmas that his book poses. For after deploring the excesses of the 1960s—the in-toxication with power that was the dirty big secret of Camelot, the "sexual riot that praised itself as radical politics," the attack of the sons, including Kazin's own, Tim. sgainst "the fathers where we lived," the triumph of advertise. ment and performance in disci-plines that still wanted hard work. and of course Vietnam—after lamenting all this. Kazin does not address directly the question now; indelibly printed on the reader's mind—What really mattered, if not all this temporal later and the second all this turmoil? Instead, in his concluding chapter, ironically titled "Words," he reports his journeys to the Soviet Union and Israel, the sites of the tragedy and the triumph of the Jews. For him, it is his heritage that matters and endures. in the concluding paragraph of this rending odyssey, we are back in New York's intellectual circles once again, "Across the river in Jersey a great fire is hurning on the piers. The sky is maddened. From the party high over Lincoln Center. looking down on the plaza that from this distance looks more serene than it really is, in the midst of a rumble with a psychoanalyst about the 'neurotic guilt of survivors,' you can see the great fire waging truly raging on several Weehawken piers. Blaze was al-ways my word for juy. Fire has haunted my life and I talk to my dead in my dreams-our dead like those epic heroes who in the other world talked to their dead separated by a screen of fire. O Lord who made Himself known as fire; where are you? 'Return, O Lord, Have Pity On Thy Servanis!' Sweet Loves! Absent Friends! Mama, Papa! where are you? The people arguing about movie reviews. Lina Wertmuller, the 'neurotic guilt of survivors, have their backs to the fire. It takes some effort to call their attention to it. But as they finally turn around and see it, a new party excitement takes over in the face of that blazing insistency over Jersey. The sky is all red, crazy red. People reach out, feel each other hungrily. The sky over our heads has been loosened at last. I want to love again, I want my God back. I will never give up until it is too late to expect you. The words are done.

U.S. Hockey Coach, at Least, Gets Acclaim

By Samuel Abt

PRAGUE May 8 (IHT)—Parading through the streets of Prague, waving to people in streetcars and signing antographs, John Mariucci, the coach of the U.S. team at the world hockey championships here, insisted that reports of his profes-sional death were, if not exaggerated, at least premature.

"I don't know how the story got started, that I had been replaced here." Mariucci said. "Correction: I do know how it got started, it was a misunderstanding, but what I don't understand is how people be-

The report last week said that Mariucci, who began coaching U.S. teams in international hockey in 1956, had been replaced in midtournament by Herb Brooks, coach at the University of Minnesota. "Herby is one of my boys, you know," Mariucci said. "I coached him when I was at the University of Minnesota and I know what a fine coach he is and it's true that he'll be the coach of the American team at the world championships next year in Moscow and at the Olympics in 1980. "So when be arrived here, it was only natural that I had him come down and sit on the bench and work with the players, because many of them will be on the team again the next two years and then, the next thing I know, the papers here are saying that I've been re-placed and then it's all over the papers in the United States and every-body is calling, even my wife . . . Mariucci, a member of the pro-

"Don't blame the coach," Mariucci said. "I can't walk on water. I don't have a wand and make miracles happen.

"There's nothing a coach can do for a team if he doesn't have mules. Either you've got them or you haven't. You can't teach the players to bump it." Mariucci appears to be genuinely fond of his players as people, and he is popular with the team, but he is realistic about the talent he has brought to Prague, where the U.S. team has won just one of its first six games.

Everybody else puts together their team with the best they can find. The Canadians have their pick of 200 players from the teams elim-inated from the Stanley Cup. I can call on maybe 15 guys. "So we wind up with college kids, amateurs, minor leaguers. I telephoned maybe 85 guys and asked them to join our team, some of them classy players. Almost all of them had some excuse: the Outside the Sport Hall, where the championships are being held, Mariucci passed a disabled army truck, with an enlisted man working on a tire and an officer watching him work. "Hello, Joe." Mariucci said to the officer, who smiled and rentomined a man shorting a and pantomimed a man shorting a hockey puck.

The nation which won the cup in 1934 and 1938 still remembers a catalogue of disasters interwoven in its rich soccer tapestry. The unfancied Swiss rolled the Italians, 41, in a playoff in 1954 and worse followed four years later when lialy failed to reach the finals for the

has been racking its brains to come up with a bomb that everyone will be happy with.

As you know, the advantage of the neutron bomb was that it killed people without destroying property. The new bomb, called the "RRR" or "Blast bomb," is a great improvement as it will not only kill people hur will also destroy everything. It is so powerful it will so powerful it will hlow up a mountain, dig a ditch three times the

The only problem is, if the United States huilds it, can it keep it for Every time we get a good thing. the oil-producing states get wind of it and want it for themselves.

There is no reason to doubt that when we perfect it Saudi Arabia and Iran will want it for their own defense, and we'll have no choice but to give it to them in exchange for not raising their prices by $1 a

This is what will happen. A Sau-di Arabian prince will visit President Carter and say, "We under-stand you have a new bomb called the Blast which will blow up all of South Yemen.

Carter will reply. "It's only a tactical weapon. We need some-thing to replace the hydrogen bomb in Europe "We'd like to huy a dozen of them for our 1st Camel Brigade."

feel about it we'll raise the price of oil at the next OPEC meeting. We consider your refusal to sell us the Blast bomb an unfriendly act. Besides. President Ford promised us we could have it when it was perfected."

"Ford didn't mention it to me." "He told me 'Anything our military has, you can have providing you only use it for defense." "Ford said that? Wouldn't you consider something like a little F-15 airplane instead?"
"We wanted the F-15s until we heard about the Blast bomb. Our military people are very concerned about the health of the dollar, and we want the biggest bang for the huck. With the Blast bomh we could become one of the major powers in the Middle East."

"But if we give any other country the Blast bomb it could fall into the hands of the Soviets."

"The Blast bomb is a matter of honor with us. What good is all our oil money if we don't have the Blast bombs to go with it?"
"I'll talk to our military people about it. They're excited about this bomb, and if I tell them the first ones off the production line have to be sold to you, they're going to be very disappointed."

The phone rings, Prime Minister Begin is on the line. Carter speaks, "Mr. Begin, you just heard about the Blast bomh? And you heard we might sell it to the Saudi Arabians? I assure you no decision has been made yet. Of course you'll get an allotment, too. But I must warn you, it's not a toy. If it performs the way we hope it will, it could blow up half the world. The only reason I would sell it to you is to guarantee a lasting peace in the Middle East."

Memoirs of a Retired Wheeler-Dealer

By Jeffrey Robinson

L ONDON (IHT)—For the last few years.

Manin Ackerman has been living the quiet life of an American an patron in Europe. It's the genteel London life_just about the opposite of the way he was living 10 years ago in New York when he was thought of as a "wheeler-dealer."

"I've had all the ego trips of success in America." be says. "I've got it all out of my system. Those days are over. I'm a retired system. Those days are over. I'm a retired wheeler-dealer. In those days if I didn't work from 7 a.m. until 11 or 12 at night. I had guilt pangs. I was exhausted, too heavy and out of shape. My first marriage went bad, I had a permanent sore on my ear-from the telephone receiver. I looked at myself one day and realized I was getting old. I had to get off the treadmill."

He was a young New York lawyer in 1960 when he started his wheeling-dealing by establishing a good line of credit with several banks. With that credit he purchased a trending Philadelephia company. In under struggling Philadelphia company. In under eight years he turned the company into a $150 million conglomerate, complete with private jet, a Beverly Hdls bank, and before the '60s were out the Curtis Publishing Company.

"I'm afraid I'm known as the man who killed off the Saturday Evening Post. But with the advantage of hindsight, I believe that Curis's problems were just too great to solve without sacrificing the Post. I think the days of the Saturday Evening Post were numbered before I arrived."

Hughes Affair

He is also known as the man who represented Clifford Irving through much of the "Howard Hughes Autohiography" affair. "I stepped out of the case as soon as I realized that Irving had been lying to us. He used people who believed in him and had tried to help him. After all, there came the time when he should bave stopped using his fami-ly and friends to further his ends and started telling everyone the truth."

Ackerman's writer-wife. Diane, adds, During a good part of the affair Cliff was staying with us in New York, and we were paying everything, even his laundry hills. Afterward, it turned out that all along there was $250,000 in cash in a wicker basket in

In 1974, at the age of 42, Martin Ackerman got off the treadmill. He divested himself of several homes...including a nine-story Park Avenue townhouse which he sold to the East German government...packed up most of his modern art collection and with Diane and their hahy daughter came to London.

"The kind of money I made in the '60s can still be made today, but only hy young people who are willing to take massive risks.

Diane and Martin Ackerman.

It can only be done by young people who have no money and therefore nothing to lose. When you have money you become too conservative." Once here, with time off each week for what can be described as "serious art

collecting," the Ackermans set about telling the story of those wheeling-dealing days of the '60s and how fortunes can still be made. "Money-Ego-Power" (Playboy Press, 1976) "is a manual for would-be wheeler-dealers." says Mrs. Ackerman. "In it we analyzed the motivations shared by people who are most interested in making money.

Then we developed a plan which could be put into practical use." Following the book's publication, they went on a six-week publicity tour of the United States. Much to their surprise, they found that many people believed the grass was greener somewhere else. Easterners thought life was probably better in the West. Television announcers wanted to be lawyers. Lawyers wanted to be art dealers. People in the Midwest thought they could make more money in the East. Through it all the Ackermans were convinced that most of those people were making enough money to live. So they started thinking about a second book, and it is just out, It's called "Living Rich" (Playboy Press, 1978).

"I sincerely think most people make enough money to live," Ackerman says.

"But it not expect to give have been as a bound to come the company to live."

"But it's not enough to simply look at how much someone makes. You also have to look at how it's spent. 'Living Rich' is a book about choices, life-styles and how to control spending."

He claims that anyone who makes $15,000-$25,000 a year can live as well as someone making $75,000. "It's a matter of refocusing priorities. Some people who think they live rich are only spending a lot of money. How to control spending a for of money. How to control spending is as important as how to make it."

Some of the ways-to-spend-mooey that the Ackermans deal with are obvious.

Diamonds: "Unless you have a really good reliable jeweler who will handle the stones for you, your only way out is the auctions where prices tend to be much lower; selling commissions are high and only the really superb gemstones fetch high prices."

Art: "Buying art with investment in mind serves two purposes. First, you have something that you enjoy living with. Secondly, you have something you can turn into cash. If you've bought well, you can be nearly certain that the value will increase."

Antiques: "If you need a chair, doesn't it make sense to spend money on a good an-tique which will be increasing in value as

But then some of the other investment But then some of the other investment areas they talk about are not so obvious. A private jet: "Forget it." Yachts: "Rather like standing under a cold shower, ripping up $100 bills." The proper cigar: "The ultimate in rich living." Polo: "At $6,000...a bargain?" Race horses: "The pleasures of ownership come at a stiff price." Sex in the office: "Uncomfortable, time consuming and dangerous." A divorce: "The best settle ment for a man is a one-time payoff to the wife. He can write it off as he would a bad investment." A great haircut: "It can make you look thinner, younger and more elegant." Looking rich: "Onassis was probably right when he said have a good tan in winter because living in sunshine is associated with money, and it usually pays to keep up appearances."

other words, according to the Ackermans, you don't necessarily have to be rich to live rich. In fact, there is one way of living rich that doesn't cost a thing. It's called free-loading.

"Just hecause a man is rich does not mean that his friends are automatically fascinating, glamorous or extremely good company. What it does often then mean is that he is prepared, to put it crudely, to buy good company. Of course, you must have some-thing to offer in return. A reputation, a name or a face that the public recognizes, anything as long as it's interesting and thought glamorous.
"If you, the most talked about young novelist in New York, spend a holiday in John Doe's house on Cap d'Antibes, then John Doe must be a pretty cultured, interesting guy. At least, that's what he hopes people are going to think. In the meantime, you're living rich."

Vladimir Horowitz and Carman de Lopez Portillo, the first lady of Mexico, after Horowitz's special concert at Carnegie Hall.

Fans From All Over PEOPLE: Cheer Vladimir Horowitz international audience of asked, 'Will you marry me?' She more than 2,000 people fdled Car-negie Hall in New York with branegie Hall in New York with bra-vos, standing ovations and floor stomping in a tribute to pianist Vladimir Horowitz on the 50th an-niversary of his American debut. Horowitz, 73, who has not played outside the United States since 1951, offered the first tickets for his international golden inhides concert to foreign fans. Housewives, bank-ers, art dealers and musicians from 11 countries used their savings, won quiz shows or took out loans to come to New York and hear Horowitz give the all Chopin recit-al. Tour groups of nearly 200 each came from Japan, France and West Germany, while other Horowitz fans traveled from New Zealand, Brazil, Mexico, Britain, Spain, the Netherlands, Italy and Canada.

"The Fonz," also known as Hen-ry Winkler, who has played the leather-jacketed, soft-hearted Arthur Fonzarelli on the U.S. television show, "Happy Days," since 1973, married Stacey Weitzman, with whom he had been living for more than a year, in a ceremony at Congregation Habonim in New York Winkler's best man was his bride's 6-year-old son, Jed. The 31-year-old actor later told a news conference he did not believe that his popularity with teen-age girls would suffer because of his marriage. He called the marriage "a longtime contract with no options-it would be destructive to think about it any other way." He added a romantic description of how he proposed: "She was taking a bath and I went outside to pick a daffodil we had grown in our garden. I dropped it into the tub and

America Calling

At his first formal appearance in Madrid in 40 years, Spain's master of surrealist art, Joan Miro, became so frightened by a horde of shoving admirers that be cut short a tour of an exhibition of his work and fled into a private room. About 150 of the 85-year-old Catalan artist's best-known canvases are being shown in Madrid's Museum of Contemporary Art. The painter, accompanied by Pio Cabanillas, the minister of culture, appeared sbaken by the crowd's attention. Although Miro was not particularly political, he fled Spain at the start of the three-year civil war in 1936 and he was later opposed to the regime of Generalissimo Francisco Franco, whose government built the museum in which his works are now on display. He now paints in a studio on the island of Majorca.

Singing star Donny Osmond and his fiancee, Debra Glenn, have been married in the Salt Lake City Mormon Temple, a church spokesman said. Spokesman Jerry Cahill said the ceremony, restricted to family members and friends, was per-formed by Elder Paul Dunn, a member of the Quorum of the Seventy of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-Day Saints, and a longtime Osmond family friend. Osmond family spokesman Ron Clark said that the couple decided last week to marry soon because the singer is beginning a three-week engagement in Las Vegas and wanted Miss Glenn to be with him.
